Beneath the billowing sails of a Windstar cruise ship, casual elegance prevails. Captain and crew invite voyagers to tour the open bridge. Onboard guides point out best-kept secrets ashore. Signature Collection Hosts—luminaries from the worlds of food, winemaking, art, and sports—are fellow seafarers, allowing guests to broaden their sailing experience. It's unhurried and uncrowded aboard these sailing yachts, with only 148 or 312 guests. Passengers set their own dining schedules and stroll the teak decks to admire the sun setting on the open sea.

For the winter of 2008-2009, guests can choose seven-day sailings to Costa Rica and to the Caribbean's hidden harbors and secluded coves—unspoiled places that elude larger vessels. Adventure awaits on the rain forest trails of the verdant Curu Reserve in Costa Rica, at the base of a 3,792-foot volcano on St. Kitts, or swimming with sea turtles off St. Barts. Those who prefer something less vigorous can sample the rum punch at a 200-year-old Barbados pub or explore pastel harbor towns filled with tantalizing boutiques, duty-free shopping, and lively local markets.

Windstar vessels, designed for lovers of the sea, have a water sports platform that opens at various ports for kayaking, windsurfing, and waterskiing. Divers can look forward to sightings of coral gardens, fish of nearly every color, and marine life such as hawksbill turtles and dolphin. Returning aboard after a day in the sun and surf, passengers can unwind on chaise lounges around the pool or rejuvenate at the ship's WindSpa. Meals can be enjoyed in the sea-view dining rooms, or alfresco by the pool. Recently refurbished staterooms and suites—all with ocean views—feature the creature comforts discerning sailors have come to expect: a sitting area, the latest entertainment technology, and every luxurious detail. An onboard library stocks an array of international newspapers, books, games, DVDs, and compact discs.

Over the past two decades, Windstar has won the hearts of travelers who appreciate the private yacht experience. Join in the adventure.
